

Menopause Readiness Audit

For organisations that want to know where they actually stand before they spend anything.

Most organisations do not have a menopause problem. They have an unmeasured one. Women in their late forties are managing symptoms privately, managers are guessing, and nobody has checked whether the existing policies cover any of it. The Queensland Code of Practice on psychosocial hazards is clear that an employer must either follow it or manage the risk to an equivalent standard — and you cannot evidence either without knowing what is happening.

The audit finds out. Four to five weeks, fixed scope, fixed price.

What it includes

- 1 A confidential survey of employees aged 40 and over, and a separate short survey of their direct managers. Anonymous, run by us, so people answer honestly.
- 2 A review of your existing policies — flexible work, personal leave, performance management, and your psychosocial risk register — against what the Code of Practice actually requires.
- 3 Two one-hour conversations: one with HR, one with a line manager who has women in that age group reporting to them.
- 4 A written report: what you are already doing well, every gap we found ranked by exposure and by cost to fix, and a recommended order of work.
- 5 A 60-minute readout session with whoever you want in the room.

What it costs

$4,500 + GST

Invoiced 50% on commencement, 50% on delivery of the report. No ongoing commitment.

What you get at the end

A document you can take to your executive, your WHS committee or your board — that says, in plain language, where you stand and what to do first.

Please note. This audit is an assessment of workplace practice and policy. It is not legal, medical or psychological advice and it does not diagnose or treat any condition. We recommend your own legal or WHS adviser reviews any policy before it is adopted, and that individual health questions go to a treating practitioner. All prices quoted in AUD, exclusive of GST.
